ABSTRACT

This listing identifies organizations which have women's concerns as a major focus, and organizations which provide training programs, workshops, conferences, seminars, curricula, and materials that enhance women's careers or self development. Section one is comprised of two alphabetical listings: national and regional organizations and national and regional directories of resources. The second section lists states and territories with some resources that are available in each. Among these are the National Organization for Women (NOW) state coordinators, state department of education sex equity personnel, and some directories of state or local resources. A subject index to the organizations listed in the first section is provided. (Author/PM)

About the Women's Educational Equity Communications Network - WEECN is an information service and communication system established in 1977 and operated by the Far West Laboratory for the U.S. Office of Education under the auspices of the Women's Educational Equity Act. As an information service, WEECN collects, screens, classifies, stores, and provides information on projects and materials related to women's educational equity. As a communication system, WEECN facilitates contact among persons, groups and agencies who are working on behalf of women's educational equity. Users of WEECN include teachers, administrators, counselors, curriculum specialists, preservice and inservice trainers, researchers, students, parents, and citizens.

If you would like to know more about WEECN, please write to us.

INTRODUCTION

The organizations described in the 1980 edition of the Directory of Organizations Working for Women's Educational Equity do not represent an exhaustive list. They are drawn from the large number that responded to us in our efforts to build a network connecting those concerned with women's educational equity. We chose organizations for inclusion based on the following criteria:

- The organization must have women's concerns as a major focus.

- The organization must be concerned at least in part with educational equity; defined rather broadly, this includes providing or preparing training programs, workshops, conferences, seminars, curricula, materials, etc., that enhance women's careers or self development. Efforts to educate or inform about women and educational equity, and efforts to implement existing legislation and to advocate other sex equity legislation are also considered to be within the educational arena.

Section One of the Directory is made up of two alphabetical listings: (1) national and regional organizations and (2) national and regional directories of resources.

Section Two is an alphabetical listing of states and territories with some resources that are available in each. Among these are National Organization for Women (N.O.W.) State Coordinators, state department of education sex equity personnel, and some directories of state or local resources.

The Subject Index to the organizations listed in Section One is at the back of the Directory. Each organization is listed under one or more subject headings based on information furnished, in most cases, by the organization.

We encourage those groups and organizations who are not listed in this Directory but who feel that they meet the criteria listed above to send us information for our Resource Library organization files. It will be used to update the Directory and to answer requests by users of the Women's Educational Equity Communications Network. Send current information and literature to:

Resource Librarian
WEECN
1855 Folsom Street
San Francisco, California 94103

The production of this Directory was made possible by the contributions of the entire WEECN staff: Kendra Bonnett, Joan Borus, Matilda Butler, Gloria Edmonson, Fran Hereth, Jean Marzone, Jean Sims, Sharon Strover, Shirley Wong. Thanks to Forrest Stepp for clerical support.

We'd like to thank the many organizations who worked with us to review and update their entries in the Directory.

We also want to thank the Women's Bureau, the Bureau of Occupational and Adult Education, the National Association of Commissions for Women, the Division of Technical Assistance, Equal Opportunity Programs, the Sex Desegregation Assistance Center of the Southwest, the American Association of University Women, and the Project on the Status and Education of Women for providing us with updated lists of organizations.

TYPES OF ORGANIZATIONS

Information on state or local resources changes quickly, and a full listing of names and addresses would soon be out of date. Following is a guide to general types of organizations, groups, and services and how to locate the resource in your state or area.

Commissions on the Status of Women

Commissions on the Status of Women deal with women's issues and concerns and work to ensure equal opportunity for women in many areas, including education. They may provide resource centers, workshops and educational programs, conferences, employment services. Many counties and cities have local Commissions which can be found in your telephone directory. For the address of your state commission contact the Women's Bureau in your region (listed in Section One) or the National Association of Commissions for Women, which can provide you with a list of state or local member commissions. The address of the current president is:

Patricia Burnett, President
National Association of Commissions for Women
18261 Hamilton Road
Detroit, Michigan 48203

National Organization for Women (N.O.W.)

N.O.W. State Coordinators for each state are listed in Section Two. Many cities have chapters. Look them up in your telephone book or contact the N.O.W. National Action Center listed in Section One.

Post-Secondary Education

Many community colleges, 4-year colleges and universities have services directed toward women. These can take various forms, such as 1) women's centers, 2) women's studies programs, 3) reentry or continuing education programs, and 4) displaced homemaker programs. Women's centers offer services similar to community-based women's centers, but also are likely to provide orientation to campus services. Women's studies programs offer courses and/or encourage the integration of women and women's studies perspectives into other course work. Many also conduct research and community outreach programs.

Reentry and continuing education centers are often designed to serve women who have previously dropped out of the educational system and/or to help women with children or jobs continue their education in a nontraditional way. Displaced homemaker programs frequently offer a combination of counseling and vocational training for the woman who has lost her source of support and must now enter the job market. Call your local community college, state college, or university to see which of these services is available.

Professional Associations

Section One lists some of the professional associations specifically for women. In addition, many professional, academic and business associations have women's caucuses or committees. These groups provide support, offer educational programs and workshops, grant educational awards, develop career guidance programs, collect and share information and conduct a variety of other advocacy and implementation activities to improve educational opportunities for women. The American Association of University Women (AAUW), the Federation of Organizations for Professional Women, and the Sex Desegregation Assistance Center of the Southwest can provide lists of professional women's groups (see Section One).

Sex Desegregation Assistance Centers

Until 1978, the Office of Education, had "General Assistance Centers" that helped solve problems related to eliminating discrimination on the basis of race, sex, and national origin in schools. Beginning in late 1978, separate centers were established to serve each of these groups. The Sex Desegregation Assistance Centers provide technical assistance, upon request, to local educational agencies in the preparation, adoption, and implementation of plans for desegregation on the basis of sex; in coping with problems that arise; and in meeting the requirements of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 and of state laws prohibiting sex discrimination. Each center serves one of the ten DHEW regions and is listed in Section One under Sex Desegregation Assistance Centers.

State Departments of Education

Basic services provided by state departments of education in most states include workshops or inservice training for awareness and compliance with legislation, guidelines on interpretation and implementation of regulations, and technical assistance services to local school districts on request. Some departments go beyond these basic services to organize talent banks, create audio-visual materials, re-train teachers to become administrators, organize conferences, coordinate with other agencies and professional organizations, monitor compliance with equity programs. In addition to their primary responsibility to the public school districts in their states, some departments provide services to community groups, professional organizations, and businesses as well. Publications and services are generally free of charge, although some states charge a nominal fee to those outside the public school system.

Special grants given to state departments by the Federal Government can be used for the expressed purpose of overcoming sex bias and sex stereotypes in education, and each state department employs one or more persons specifically to help implement Federal legislation concerning women's educational equity. Sex equity coordinators for vocational education and other sex equity personnel are listed by state in Section Two. of the Directory.

Women's Bureau

The Women's Bureau is the only Federal agency devoted exclusively to women in the labor force. Its major objective is to improve the economic status of all women, especially minority women, mature and reentry women, displaced homemakers, teenage women, battered women, women offenders and ex-offenders, low-income women, rural women, and women business owners. The Women's Bureau acts as advocate by proposing policies and programs to the Administration and other Labor Department agencies. It provides technical assistance; initiates women's employment programs; brings women, government, and community groups together; monitors legislation; and is a major source of information and data on working women.

Regional administrators carry out agency programs and provide information at the local level. National and regional offices are listed in Section One under "Women's Bureau."

Women's Centers

Women's Centers take many forms. Some are campus-based; some community-based. A Woman's Center may be a room for reading, relaxation and group meetings, or it may be an entire building in the community, housing many women's projects. San Francisco and Los Angeles have such buildings. Much depends on the needs and energy of the community and the resources available. Activities may include: individual or group counseling, tutoring, career and self-development projects, consciousness-raising rap groups, job placement service, workshops, health and pregnancy counseling and referral, child care, displaced homemaker services, educational reentry services, rape and battered women counseling, women's switchboard, resource library, older women's services, art and music studios, classes in exercise, meditation, dance, martial arts, self defense, and others.

A strategy for finding women's centers is to look under "Women" or "Woman" or "Feminist" in the white and yellow pages of your local telephone book. Other sources are the Project on the Status and Education of Women's publication, "Women's Centers: Where Are They?" and "The Women's Action Almanac," published by Women's Action Alliance. These organizations and directories are listed in Section One.

Women's Educational Equity Act Program

Since WEEA began funding projects in 1976, a variety of programs and products have been supported. Individual projects are not listed because they change yearly. A list of the current projects can be obtained from:
